Excerpt: .Assert how perilous election is By peers all bound and circumstanced alike. If he were solely moved by noble thoughts, And is the signal hero you give out-Nothing I say, and nothing I deny Then were the nobles who deserted him Unworthy cowards, beggars, churls, knaves, hounds. Shall I condemn my order so? or think That Wallace hoped to aggrandise himself, And lost those friends who had no need to fight For mere existence when the restive hoof Of personal ambition kicked aside The patriot s caparison? You wince: But with the time I drift, and cannot find A mooring for my judgment. Pardon me. This I believe: there is no warrior Before the world, who could, even with those means Of formal power that Wallace mostly lacked, Have wrought the tittle of his accomplishment: His name will be an ensign; and his acts...
