The benefit of them is, they secure attention, reveal to the teacher how much of the lesson is in the mind, deepen its impression, strengthen memory's hold, and give the teacher a good foundation on which to build religious truth. They also give variety in teaching, and make the scholars feel the necessity of studying the lesson well before coming to the school. CHAPTER V. MENTAL PHILOSOPHY--CONTINUED - The Sensibilities. L Definition. The term sensibility means the ability to feel; and is used with references to the five senses. The plural term, Sensibilities, is used to designate the states of mind, sometimes called feelings. We are conscious of emotions, desires, etc., that arise within the mind, which are caused by the exercise of our intellectual faculties. The perception of an object, through the sight of the eye, may first secure our attention, then the perception of some quality in the object may awaken a feeling of desire or aversion toward that object. These capabilities of feeling are termed Sensibilities 2. There are two classes of these, termed by philosophers the Natural and the Moral Sensibilities. They may be distinguished by the views which they respectively take of the object in respect to which they are called into exercise. The one considers objects chiefly as they have a relation to ourselves; the other, as they relate to all possible existences. The one...
