Excerpt: . . . period compared to fall hatchlings, and (B) based upon our extensive observations of mortality in laboratory rearing studies, the high observed mortality of terrapin embryos in late stages of development at oiled sites is unusual. In summary, results of our study suggest that the oil spill may have contributed to a reduction in nest size throughout the area of study and may have increased the mortality of presumed spring emergers at oiled sites. Based on the life history characteristics of this species, we believe these potential impacts to terrapin reproduction during 2000 are probably minor. We found no evidence of a major, catastrophic impact of the oil spill on terrapin reproduction in the Patuxent River. REFERENCES CITED Alam, S. K. , M. S Brim. 2000. Organochlorine.
