Twitter-Inspired: How to turn Unimaginable Grief into Something Positive in 288 Twitter-sized Life Stories. Includes helpful sections with latest information on How Grief Impacts our Health, What Coping Strategies are others grieving using to get through their Grief Attacks, What are these Signs from Above that people talk about, and How to find Grief Support by your Type of Loss. Demographic, social and health trends indicate that the total number of people grieving, and specially children, will climb to some of the highest levels ever, but in a new survey by online grief support non-profit, www. MyGriefAngels. org, the overwhelming majority of respondents said: They were not prepared for dealing with the loss of a loved one, they want schools to do a better job of preparing us for this natural part of life, and they associate grieving with pain and depression. New Twitter-inspired book, Good from Grief (www. GoodfromGrief. org), addresses head on the surveys call for greater grief education, and grieves negative association. The book is by two Harvard classmates that felt uneducated, unprepared and lost...
