The character for truth and goodness stands Above all others, and respect commands; We all admire it, and wherever shewn, Its sterling merit are compelled to own. It is as precious ointment poured forth, Pleasant, inviting, and of priceless worth. A nation s real greatness, we are told, Consists not in its silver or its gold, Its mighty armies skilled in arts of war, Or navies brave to guard us near or far; In truth and right a nation s greatness lies, By these alone can nations truly rise, By these their purity and power maintain, Or lasting and unfading honour gain. As tis with nations, so it is with men; History confirms it o er and o er again; Proving tis goodness makes men truly great, And gives to character its real weight. Security, prosperity, and might, Are ever yoked with purity and right. An honest character all men require, And greatly those who purpose climbing higher. Who, knowingly, would place a knave in trust, Or power and influence give to men unjust? He who a stainless character can boast Needs fear no foe, nor quail before a host; He, who with mind at ease and manly tread, Among his peers can boldly lift his head; Though hard may be his toil, harder his fare, He treasure has of good beyond compare. For every station, and for every post, The thing that s wanted, yea, and wanted most, Is character;...
