GAO found that: (1) the condition of and maintenance requirements for equipment returning from the operations varied considerably; (2) most of the equipment used in the operations was left unattended and unprotected from adverse desert conditions; (3) nearly all large vehicles and aircraft sent to the Gulf region had some preexisting maintenance needs that became worse during the operations; (4) it was very difficult to clearly identify incremental operation-related maintenance and repair requirements before the operations from maintenance required under peacetime operating conditions; (5) the services financial accounting systems do not differentiate between organizational- or intermediate-level maintenance obligations; (6) the combination of normal maintenance funding and DCA funding could reduce future maintenance requirements; and (7) reduced future maintenance requirements should not necessarily reduce future funding levels.
