Not illustrated. 1882 Excerpt: . . . through, and a little above it is the railway bridge, over which the Yarmouth and North Norfolk Railway runs, with a station not far off--Potter lleigham. Near the station is the Falgate Inn, where there is comfortable accommodation, and at the bridge is the Watermans Arms, where one or two bedrooms, and a small parlour, all scrupulously clean, are obtainable. Just by the bridge, in a sort of wooden Peggotys Hut, lives Applegate, who has good boats, sailing and rowing, for hire stowed away in a remarkably neat boat-house. The fishing all round is as good as it can be, and I never fail to get a jack near the bridge, while, within four miles he Hickling and Somerton Broads, lleigham Sounds, and Horsey Mere. For myself, I should prefer this as a fishing and boating station, to any other, because of the wildness of the...
