She would be buried in Chorley Wood Churchyard, of course. He knew it well; it was opposite a corner of the common, and had a low wall round it. He even knew the spot where she would lie, next her grandmother, who had lived with them, and died soon after the Thompson household left London. He hated to think of it----his little gentle Daisy, buried in the deep cold ground; in this dreary weather, too; there had been some sleet early in the morning. Oh, it was cruel! He said a dozen tender things about her to himself, and tried to be certain that he meant them--that he loved her, that he was miserable, but all the time at the bottom of his heart he knew himself to be a hypocrite. He looked up the trains; there was one that...
