In Eighteen Hundred Seventy-three, when I landed there and carried my carpetbag out to Cold Spring looking for my uncle, walking so as to save carfare, the population was two hundred thousand. In Nineteen Hundred the population was three hundred fifty thousand. In Nineteen Hundred Ten it was four hundred twenty-five thousand. Now it is five hundred thousand. Of course, I do not claim that my advent into Buffalo increased the population in the rapid way that I have enumerated. However, I can truthfully lay claim to having increased the wealth of Buffalo not a little. This does not mean that I have attached myself permanently to any large rolls of currency. Nevertheless I can say in all sincerity that Buffalo has been good to me. In Eighteen Hundred Seventy-five I was working in a soap-factory on Seneca Street, in the district known as The Hydraulics.
